"In the early months of this thing I made many plans, maybe a dozen, involving rectangular plans of various styles. As an architect I am not without plans," he replied. "It is quite possible to do away with the annular court in the entre to which the justices object,"

It will cost the county of New York $50,000 to get rid of Mr. Lowell, and it will cost at least $10,000 if the justices of the 1st Judicial District insist on an entirely new plan. For this reason and because Mr. Lowell's plan has been approved by the Municipal Art Commission and the experts employed to pass upon its merits, the Court House Board has determined to prevent its rejection, if possible.

"The board will meet next Tuesday afernoon to arrange some kind of a get together between the justices and the board, and we'll see if some adjustment of our differences can't be arrived at," said L. Laffin Kellogg, the secretary

"Personally I am surprised and greatly disappointed by the action of the justices. The board is unanimously devoted to Mr. York, arrived to-day to open their cottage Lowell's plan. All the justices of the Suthe plan was tentatively examined last spring expressed their approval.

Mr. Lowell was particularly sorrowful yesterday because the justices said his plan would cost $20,000,000. He said experts all agreed the building would not cost more than $10,000,000 above the cost of the foundation.
